

Amanda Mauriz

Amanda Mauriz was born and raised in Los Angeles, California and attended California State University Monterey Bay, where she received a BA in Global Studies with a minor in International Health Policy.

Her passion for public health and education began when she was a young girl, whom learned she had a heart murmur and underwent open heart surgery to repair it. In addition, she was a medical mission volunteer with the Peruvian American Medical Society (PAMS), where she assisted and translated for physicians to provide medical services to the rural communities of Ayacucho, Peru.

She currently serves participants in Spanish and English as a bilingual enrollment coordinator at San Francisco Health Plan (SFHP), which provides application support and assisting members of the public with eligibility and enrollment into health coverage programs.

She is enthusiastic about pursuing a Master's degree in Public Health in order to support and serve the underserved communities. In her spare time, Amanda enjoys exercising, traveling, and discovering the outdoors.
