

Isabel Cuevas

Isabel Cuevas grew up in Los Angeles County and attended California State University, Long Beach where she received a Bachelor of Science degree in Health Care Administration with a minor in Health Science. She found her passion for public health at an early age when she began volunteering for the American Diabetes Association. Once she graduated from college, she began working in health promotion and was dedicated to serving underprivileged communities. Through her work in the field, she has strived to get members reengaged with their health and connected them with resources to address any psychosocial issues. Currently, she works as a Care Management Coordinator for PIH Health Physicians medical group where she assists in care coordinator needs and collaborates with care teams to develop effective care plans by assessing health interventions and identifying barriers that may affect access to care. During her spare time, she enjoys hiking, cycling, and spending time with friends.
