Rachel is the community health nurse manager at Hope Street Margolis Family Center where she oversees the health needs of approximately 300 children and their families in Downtown and South-Central Los Angeles. She earned her BS in Nursing at Azusa Pacific University where she graduated valedictorian of her nursing class. Prior to Hope Street, she worked as a Pediatric Intensive Care Unit RN for 4.5 years at Children's Hospital Los Angeles where caring for children impacted by the consequences of structural health inequities in the form of preventable illness and injury first sparked her interest to pursue a degree in Public Health.

Rachel has a passion for pediatric and maternal/reproductive health and is excited to learn how to create programs that will bridge the gaps that exist across the continuum of care. In her free time Rachel enjoys embroidering, making matcha lattes, and practicing Muay Thai.
