

Raheem Habib

Raheem Habib is a Medical Device sales representative at Abbott Vascular who strives for knowledge and growth in the healthcare industry. Raheem's interest in public health began when he interned as a research assistant for a public health study. He then began working as a peer health educator for his college's health department.

Now, Mr. Habib is a graduate of the University of California, San Diego with a Bachelor of Science degree in Public Health and is seeking an influential role with competitive and challenging organizations to help fight health disparities within Black and underserved communities.

Mr. Habib is currently pursuing his Master's in Public Health and plans to use his education to work with various health programs dedicated to impacting low-income, underserved and black communities. He also plans to use his education to be an activist and to advocate for communities whose health and well-being is often not taken into consideration when policies and laws are implemented.

Raheem loves traveling, volunteering, cooking and eating out. His family owns a west African food catering business called Hajja's Ghanaian Cuisine and he loves to promote and see people try their delicious food.
